Medical alliance to be discontinued

By Megan Durisin | Originally Published: 13 hours ago | Modified: 13 hours ago | No comments

Following an anonymous $100 million gift Western Michigan University announced it received Tuesday to start a medical school, MSU will lose a medical student training partnership it currently has with Kalamazoo hospitals, according to The Grand Rapids Press.

The partnership MSU has with Bronson Methodist Hospital and Borgess Medical Center has been in place for 40 years and allows MSU medical students and residents to train in its facilities. The collaboration most likely will end in about two years, when the Western Michigan University medical school begins admitting students.

According to the article, about 30 MSU medical students and more residents train in the two hospitals annually.

More in City:

- Students compete to win city’s next bright idea
- Council likely to request Brownfield funding for Ann Street project
- Census data to be released today
- Food drive helps area food banks
- ELPD calls for all hands on deck for St. Patrick’s Day
Type the two words:

Please make sure you've entered a valid email address. You will be required to verify it before your comment is published. If you have questions or concerns, please do not hesitate to contact us.